

The Giraffe and her Emotional Spots

Once upon a time there was a giraffe that was special. She was different to all the other giraffes and animals. The reason for this was because depending on how she was feeling, her giraffe spots changed colours! One day she received an invitation for a party but she had never been to one. She was scared the other animals would make fun of her colour changing spots. But she felt brave and she decided to go and see what the party was like. The invitation said 11th February which was tomorrow! In a way, it was better it was soon so she didn't have to think about it too much. She also saw on the invitation that other guests included the lion, the monkey and the tiger.

She got excited about the party. Feeling excited made her spots turn pink! The next day she put her hat on and went to the party. When she arrived at the party everyone stared at her and went quiet. She felt embarrassed and sad. Her spots went blue. Then the lion told her she could be the first to the obstacle race because she was different. Her spots suddenly went black because she felt scared. But she was also determined to try it. She was at the party already so she might as well try. She started to run, jumps, go under branches and balance things on her back and she started to have so much fun! Her spots turned yellow and pink! Those are the colours for happiness and excitement. All the other animals started to clap and cheer. Then the rest of the animals took their turn to do the obstacle race. The giraffe cheered them on and made new friends. She was happy she had been brave enough to go to the party. After everyone had finished the obstacle race, the animals sat down to eat a lot of tasty food, chat and laugh. The giraffe felt calm and comfortable with her new friends. Her spots were green. She now had a group of friends who accepted her with her colour spots.

The End.
